150 Arrested In 6-Nation Drug Sting

Money Laundering Disrupted, DEA Says

By Sharon LaFraniere
Washington Post Staff Writer

Federal drug enforcement officials said yesterday they have disrupted the money-laundering wing of the leading Colombian cocaine cartel by arresting more than 150 people in six countries and seizing nearly $42 million in illegal drug profits.

Drug Enforcement Administration officials said the three-year undercover effort was the first instance of international cooperation on a drug-money-laundering case and the first time authorities uncovered enough evidence to link the Colombian Cali drug cartel to the Sicilian Mafia.

Among those charged were seven top money managers for the Cali cartel, now Columbia's most powerful cocaine-trafficking organization, according to the DEA. Tom Clifford, a DEA supervisor in San Diego who coordinated the investigation, estimated that the cartel still employs dozens of other top money managers. But a DEA spokesman said, "we have taken a real bite out of their hide with these seven guys."

In Rome, a top-ranking Italian police official said the arrests would damage the alliance between the Colombian cartel and the Sicilian Mafia. "We have carried out many operations with the Americans but this is the biggest and most significant," said police official Achille Serra.

After Attorney General William P. Barr authorized the investigation in September 1989, Clifford said, DEA agents established a phony investment consulting firm named Trans Americas Ventures Associates. Undercover agents relied on informants to introduce the "firm" to the Cali cartel as an efficient collector of drug profits.

"Our whole purpose was to arrange the collection of funds," said Clifford. "We told them we had the capability to collect anywhere in the world. We told them we had representatives in other countries."

At the suggestion of cartel operatives, he said, undercover agents set up fake leather goods businesses, leasing warehouses in Houston, Fort Lauderdale, Miami, Chicago and New York. The cartel members shipped a token amount of merchandise but pretended to export much more. That generated false paperwork they could then use to justify their Colombian bank deposits of illegal drug profits, Clifford said.

Clifford said it took a year to establish the phony corporation, another year to win the trust of the cartel and a third to actually run the operation. "Very slowly, they came to trust us," he said.

Just before the arrests, undercover agents arranged to receive cocaine shipments that were then seized. Three hundred kilos of cocaine is still "on its way on a boat," he said.

Undercover agents were able to convince the seven alleged money brokers to leave Colombia for meetings and parties in San Diego, Costa Rica and Italy. DEA Administrator Robert C. Bonner said that while some were arrested abroad, he expects all seven to be tried in the United States.

Bonner said 112 arrests took place in the United States, 29 in Italy and the rest in Canada, England, Spain and Costa Rica. Italian police officials said one defendant, who had 12 different identities, devised some of the cartel's more ingenious methods of smuggling drugs into Europe. Italians identified five bogus organizations that helped the cartel launder money, including one posing as an animal rights group, police said.

About 70 of those arrested in the United States were "cell heads and cell members"—worker bees in the cartel, according to Clifford. The rest were more significant players, he said.

Special correspondent Clare Pedrice contributed to this report from Italy.

CORRECTIONS

The date of a walk-through tour of the Corcoran Gallery of Art's exhibit "Cavaliers and Cardinals: Nineteenth Century French Anecdotal Paintings" with curator Eric Zafran was incorrectly reported in a Style article yesterday. It is Oct. 29 at 7 p.m.

An article Saturday about California's adoption of legislation outlawing employment discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation failed to include New Jersey among other states with similar laws.
